How this stays clean

Window Board shows company trading windows and company policies. It is built to show no people and to cite every number.

Public SEC filings only

Every fact comes from public SEC filings and the SEC rule text. We buy no data. We scrape no profiles.

No people

No person's name appears anywhere. There are no rows about one person. There is no net worth, no holdings, and no home address. The only place shown is the company's headquarters city.

Small counts stay hidden

A company cell needs at least 3 different filers. Fewer than that rolls into "other" or reads "fewer than 3."

Dates are estimates

Every date is printed with this note:

> Estimated; the company can close the window; insiders need pre-clearance.

Constraints, not advice

It shows what each company's filed policy allows, like hedging or pledging. These are product constraints. It never says what a client should buy.

Visits

The PDF has no tracking. The web page is part of javula.me and uses that site's visit analytics. The board's data holds no reader information.

Every number has a source

Each number links to the filing or rule behind it. A separate checker recomputes the numbers from the filings. Anything it cannot confirm is cut.

Quotes are exact

Policy quotes are checked word for word against the filed text. A quote that does not match is not shown.
